Palmer's allusion to General Logan's election to the Senate as a trick. Palmer disclaimed any intention of reflecting on Logan and gave the history of Logan's cliction. Chandler argued it was mother objection to the present degraded condition of suffrage in the United States.

Palmer replied to Chandler's allusions to his political history, and said he left the Republican party when it left its own principles and became a tariff and protectionist party. He had no fear of the popular vote. While the Republican party
